Crafting Employability Strategies for HE Students of Languages in Europe

CES & L Project

Languages 4 Work

Language fluency is critical for university graduates to secure work in the global workplace. This project aims to enhance language students' employability by engaging them in work related activities as part of their academic studies so they can optimize their career opportunities after graduation. The CES&L project team is working with employers across Europe to seek their views on how HEI can support their students to be more employable and recognize the significance of their modern languages degree in today's international job market. The views of the employers will shape the workshops which means the material will be up to date, relevant and tailored for each of the member countries. The main aim of this project is transferring the generic AHECS (Association of Higher Education Careers Services in Ireland) Employability module into the different target languages of international European partners and customize it for HE students of languages.

Supporting Language Graduates into successful careers.

Cooperation between students, academics, career services and graduate employers.

The current employability module that will be adapted consists of 8 workshops including introductions and aims for each workshop, comprehensive facilitator notes, clear methods, activities and timings, easy-to-use materials (activity sheets), learning outcomes and assessment strategies available both for in class and online work.
